

Future Actuarial Developments in Household Insurance

The intention of this workshop is to gain the views of those attending as to what the key issues actuaries working in the UK Household business are going to have to face over the next few years.

The workshop will therefore be highly participative. It is intended that the output of the session will be collated and made available after the conference to those who are interested. It is also hoped that some major themes will be identified that can be picked up by the Household Business Working Party over the next year.

It would be helpful if, before the session, attendees have spent some time considering the following:-

- ◇ What of relevance may happen on the political or economic front to affect household insurance ?
- ◇ What is likely to happen to the market over the next few years ?
- ◇ What social trends are relevant to the business ?
- ◇ What developments are there on the reserving side that will affect the way actuaries work within the field ?
- ◇ What developments are there on the pricing side that will affect the way actuaries work within the field ?
- ◇ What developments are there on the marketing side that will affect the way actuaries work within the field ?
- ◇ What is the biggest threat to the actuary's involvement in the business ?
- ◇ What is the biggest opportunity for the actuary to make a positive contribution to the business ?
- ◇ Is the household business better off for having had actuaries involved for the past few years ?
